WHAT WE DO

Through social media, open letters to medical school admissions faculty, communication with the Association of American Medical Colleges, and relationships with attending physicians and public health experts, SEA aims to do the following:

- Advocate for a diverse and well-rounded future physician workforce
- Demand safe MCAT testing conditions or MCAT options, admissions during the pandemic
- Offer premedical students a place to share their opinions and concerns without fear of retribution
- Create a culture of transparency where AAMC must give students clear and accessible information to make important decisions

WHY WE DO IT

Amidst the coronavirus pandemic and unprecedented civil unrest, SEA members recognized that premedical students lacked an official advocacy body. Because nearly all aspects of medical school admissions are controlled by a single 501c3 organization, we decided to create a group that could both speak out for premedical interests and advocate for greater transparency from the AAMC.

HOW WE DO IT

SEA members advocate in numerous ways, including (though not limited to):

- Social media campaigns
- Media outreach
- Direct communication with medical schools and the AAMC
- Research/Surveys
- Legislative actions
- Relationship building with academic medicine leaders
